Located in historic downtown Silver City, Diane's Restaurant brings life to upscale dishes in family size portions.

In 1970, Diane and Frank Werber, Bodhi's father, opened Silver City's first health food store and 40 years later she still tries to feed her family and customer's healthy, great tasting food.

From salad dressings to pies, everything is made in house and fresh. Diane's baked goods are made from scratch across the street. Their breads are artisan made in the same method master bakers have been using for hundreds of years. You will barely ever see them use a microwave and their kitchen doesn't have a deep fryer. Diane's takes family recipes that have been perfected for generations to give you great simple finger food and tasty dishes.

Myra's philosophy at Slate Street Cafe is to be part of the neighborhood and community by offering comfort foods with a twist. The menu is thoughtfully sourced and made from scratch. "We want to offer delicious, fresh foods with exceptional service in a comfortable atmosphere." Myra is also the house sommelier and brings a fresh new approach to wine drinking. "I want to offer wine that is of excellent quality, but still reasonably priced. I want to take away the intimidation factor in wine selection and simply let people enjoy it." She also teaches a community course in wine appreciation aside from her twice monthly wine tastings in the loft. Both are very popular.

Best of all, you can see Myra wearing one of her many 'hats' when you visit the Slate Street Cafe. The community has embraced the Slate Street Cafe and for an Albuquerque 'local' that is a great feeling.

In 1965, a time when most women couldn't even apply for a bank card without their husband's signature, Ruth Fertel risked it all and mortgaged her home to buy a small steak house in New Orleans. As a single mom with two boys, Ruth taught herself the restaurant business, endured countless challenges and, in the process, redefined hospitality.

Known as the First Lady of Steak, Ruth Fertel was something special. From a 60-seat steak house, she built a business that spans the globe, but never lost sight of her original recipe for success: perfect steak, warm hospitality and good times that never stop rolling.
